“ Regret Scovefield “

Regret Scovefield was born on a ranch in central Texas in 1878. His mother gave birth to him during a Comancheros raid while his father and some Texas Rangers fought them off. He worked on his father's ranch till his early teens but his almost unnatural ability to track soon made him the go to guy of any posse. He left home at nineteen and for years floated from town to town working as a Deputy Sheriff tracking outlaws where ever he was needed. He later served in the Spanish American War where he fought with distinction as one of Teddy Roosevelt's Rough Riders. After the war, he stayed in the military where he later became the training Sargent for the use of the 97 trench gun for the troops going to Europe to fight in World War 1. After he retired from the military he became an adviser to the FBI on tracking methods which proved to be instrumental in apprehending Gangsters up to and during the Prohibition era. Regret Scovefield died in his sleep sitting in a chair at home after reading a book on Wyatt Earp which was found on his lap.
