The James Brothers

Frank and Jesse James rose to fame on December 7, 1869, when they rode into Gallatin, Missouri to avenge a friend's death. They entered the Daviess County Savings Association where former Union captain John Sheets was talking to a lawyer named William McDonald. As they walked in, the lawyer started to leave and the James brothers cornered John Sheets and shot him twice. They robbed the bank's safe and till and ran off.

A Posse went after the James Brothers, and managed to get several shots off. One of the brothers fell off his horse, but the other brother managed to hoist him up on his horse and they eventually outpaced and eluded the posse.

The Kansas City Daily newspaper reported, "There is a boldness and recklessness about this robbery and murder that is almost beyond belief."

Jesse James had been part of a group of Confederate soldiers that slaughtered a large group of Union soldiers during the Civil War. He was sought by the North for war crimes, and turned to his outlaw ways as a result. This made him something of a hero to the South as he was, in some fashion, avenging their defeat by the North. He became a political hero as a result, despite his crimes.

Note: This match may use one or two bays. Three stages are provided for Bay 1 and six stages are written for Bay 2. If using a single bay, skip the Bay 1 instructions.
